

Give Your Child The Gift of Time

You are the most important person in your child's life, and to become a well-disciplined person, she needs your love, your support, your example and your time. Spending time with your child doesn't mean going on special outings, although those are a nice treat. It means including her in your life. Here are some simple ideas:

- Make an appointment. If the demands of your day let time slip away, then schedule time with your child! Block out an hour every evening for a family meal or relaxation time.
- Do chores as a family. Have your child work alongside you and you will accomplish several things: You'll teach your child responsibility, you'll gain an extra hand and you'll complete meaningful work—together.

- Enjoy “downtime” together. Listen to music your child enjoys. Watch a movie or TV show together. Your child will appreciate your interest. This also provides opportunity for conversation. Ask your child to explain why she likes her favorite show or music.

Firm, Fair & Consistent

Copyright © 2011 The Parent Institute, a division of NIS, Inc. www.parent-institute.com

May be reproduced by Firm, Fair & Consistent® newsletter subscribers.

THE
PARENT
INSTITUTE®