

PANTHER POST

Keeler Center Student Stuns with Impressive Artwork

Addisyn Corker, a junior at the Keeler Center, has had a passion for art ever since the 3rd-grade. When faced with struggles academically, Corker found enjoyment and escape through doodling and her artwork. Fast forward nine years, she has strengthened her art skills and has positioned herself for a bright future as an artist.

Motivated to succeed in both her art and academics, Corker found opportunities to practice outside of school. Looking to create a comprehensive portfolio of her works, Corker enrolled in an AP art course through Heath Art, a program designed to help students create their portfolios and ensure they are ready to present to colleges for consideration. Following her participation in the course, Corker put together a comprehensive portfolio of her artwork and submitted it to College Board for grading. Corker hopes to continue her education at The College for Creative Studies.

Practicing art is much more than a hobby for Corker, it's a passion. Being able to express herself through her art allows her a place to escape. Moving forward, Corker hopes to sharpen her skills to be able to take an image she has in her mind and translate it directly to the paper.

